Practice and Benefits Incidental to Participation before Initial Full-Time Collegiate Enrollment (I)

A prospective student-athlete may practice and receive benefits incidental to participation (e.g., room and board) before initial full-time collegiate enrollment, regardless of the prospective student-athlete's academic certification status, as certified by the NCAA Eligibility Center, provided the institution reasonably believes the prospective student-athlete will meet minimum initial-eligibility requirements for practice before initial full-time collegiate enrollment (e.g., via an additional core-course unit and/or standardized test). Once the institution reasonably believes the prospective student-athlete will not or cannot meet minimum initial-eligibility requirements for practice, the prospective student-athlete must stop participating in practice and may no longer receive benefits incidental to participation. However, once the institution receives notice that a complete initial-eligibility waiver application (including all required documentation) has been received by the Eligibility Center, the prospective student-athlete may: (1) practice until a decision has been issued; and (2) receive benefits incidental to participation until a decision has been issued or the first day of classes, whichever occurs first.
